JAPANESE SAILOR TRIED TO BLOW UP JAPANESE WARSHIP
[By Latest Mail.]
TOKYO.—The fact that an attempt was made by a Japanese sailor to blow up the Japanese battleship Nisshin in November, 1912, has been brought to light by the recent conviction and execution of death sentence upon the guilty seaman. Two men were killed and 17 wounded in the explosion, which failed, however, to destroy the warship.

The seaman was Sankichi Furuta, a second warrant officer of the Nisshin, and according to his ultimate confession the motive was revenge. He said inferior men had been promoted over him. He therefore plotted to destroy the ship and all on board. He ignited a heavy charge of powder while the warship was at Shizuoka.

The real cause of the disaster was mysteriously kept secret. Naval authorities explained that the powder magazine had accidentally exploded. Mean-

The "AD MAN"

GERMAN CONSUL SAYS JAPAN DID NOT DESIRE WAR

[By Latest Mail.]
SEATTLE, Wash., Sept. 13.—The steamship Minnesota, which left Yokohama August 30, arrived here today bearing Count von Rex, late German Ambassador to Japan, a big, ruddy-faced man wearing a Texas cowboy hat; the members of the embassy staff and the various German consular officers recalled from Japan and Vladivostok.

Count von Rex said Japan declared war against Germany under pressure from England, and that the Japanese people and Cabinet did not desire war. "There were many urgent telegrams from London, many conferences between the British Embassy and the Japanese foreign office before Japan entered the fight," declared the count. "Wants to know U. S. attitude."

Being asked what he thought of Japan's action, the ambassador replied: "I have no opinion to express. I should like to know what the United States thinks of it. You have islands in the Pacific that may be taken over by Japan the next time you get in trouble."

Count von Rex seemed to consider the plight of the Kiaochow garrison hopeless. "The Japanese," he said, "are free to attack with 200,000 men if they choose, while we have only a few thousand defenders. Tsingtau is not a fortress like Port Arthur. It is not a strong place. Its fall is only a matter of time. But what military glory can Japan gain by capturing Tsingtau?" The count continued:

"The Japanese military skill was acquired from German teaching. We have taught them all they know in medicine, engineering and the higher learning. Japanese students have been welcomed in all our great universities, and this is our reward. Japan turns against us at the first opportunity."

All the Germans except Baron Schoen are on their way to Germany, but do not know exactly how they will attain their destination. The ambassador is beyond military age, as he says regretfully, and he probably could reach Italy unmolested, but nearly all the other men are young and eligible for army service, and would be taken from any neutral ship that was searched by the British.

The travelers are at a hotel here awaiting orders from their government. They may go East tomorrow. They say they were treated with perfect courtesy by the people of Japan, even after war was declared. Germans employed or engaged in business in Japan have not been molested.

There were numerous English passengers on the Minnesota. They did not mix with the Germans in any way. Through the Strait of Fuca the Minnesota kept on the American side, fearing search by a British warship.

Passengers belonging to neutral nations agreed that Japan was not greatly excited over her war with Germany, feeling that it was undertaken from a sense of duty and that it would occupy only a small part of Japan's fighting force.

FRENCH BEET SUGAR REFINERY IS THEIR PYRE

[By Latest Mail]

PARIS, Sept. 14.—A chauffeur who conducted two officers to the front witnessed the siege of a beet sugar refinery where 2000 Germans had taken refuge during the battle of the Marne. It was impossible, he says, for the infantry to dislodge them, and their fire was very damaging. Finally a battery of the famous "75" took position, and at the third salvo from these guns the building and its dependencies were seen to be on fire. The howl coming from the refinery was audible even in the din of the cannonading.

The Germans jumped from the windows and were shot as they fell by the infantry. Many surrendered and a few escaped, perhaps 200 or 300. The rest perished in the refinery and its surroundings.
